Our Journey: Minnesota United Nations Movement

Prepared by James W. Nelson, Principal researcher

"The value of history is, indeed, not scientific but moral: by liberalizing the mind, by deepening the sympathies, by fortifying the will, it enables us to control, not society, but ourselves -- a much more important thing; it prepares us to live more humanely in the present and to meet rather than to foretell the future." Carl Becker, 1873-1945, U.S. historian

"We Are In!" Governor Dayton, together with over 60 leading Minnesota Corporations, confirms that Minnesota will join 23 states as part of the U.S. Climate Alliance and abide by the United Nations' goals agreed to by 196 national governments in Paris in 2015. The current US administration has announced the intention to withdraw from this accord. In Minnesota, we are making history!

Most of these corporations have explicitly adopted United Nations inspired Sustainable Development Goals as part of their corporate operating principles. This is very encouraging evidence of the role of the United Nations in an interdependent world.

The Minnesota Historical Society awarded Citizens for Global Solutions, Minnesota a “small grant” ($9,500) to collect historical materials that could prove useful in the observance of the 75th Anniversary of the United Nations during 2020. This report summarizes our one year of activities under this grant. Attached is a catalogue of items collected for the Minnesota United Nations History Resource File (Attachment A).

Our Journey: Minnesota United Nations Movement

The project was entitled “Our Journey” to connote that Minnesotans have been grappling with the international dimension of our citizenship since the dark days of the World War II era. There are three major themes that have guided selection of materials for this specialized historical resource collection:

1. It’s Time! As we confront a multitude of contemporary global challenges -- terrorism, population growth and migration, nuclear proliferation and adverse climate change to name a few -- it is important to examine our heritage of efforts to build durable global institutions to systematically deal with global-scale problems.
2. The vitality of the United Nations movement is a reflection of ordinary citizen’s active participation, carrying out remarkable actions to bring peace and harmony to our broken world. Gandhi’s famous quote “when the people lead, leaders will follow” has been a guiding principle. Although the United Nations’ management infrastructure is often viewed as a far-away meeting place for diplomats and administrators, there are many creative individuals and organizations working here in Minnesota to fulfill the goals of the United Nations.
3. Previously the historical records related to Minnesota’s role in the UN movement were widely scattered and vulnerable to being lost or greatly underappreciated. We underestimated in our original proposal how difficult and time consuming was the task of collecting and organizing. Bringing the pieces together into a collection, with some interpretive aides, promotes the viewing of historical patterns and trends and deepens the appreciation of individual items. A bibliography of relevant authors provides guidance as to what ideas were motivating Minnesotans’ purposeful actions to build a more resilient and healthy world.

A narrative outline of the first twenty-five years compiled by the International Learning Alliance describes the movement's early years (1945-1972) and provides context to this less well-known period of the United Nations movement and its impact on the people in Minnesota (Attachment B). Stories of the pioneers in Minnesota's UN movement are revealed in this narrative. We mention two examples below:

World Government News, September 1950

Pictured here are Clare and Ronald McLaughlin. The booklet recalls how music professional Clare and war veteran / airline pilot Ron started the forerunner of Citizens for Global Solutions, Minnesota in 1946. They organized a major United Nations conference in Minneapolis in 1948. Governor Luther Youngdahl was the keynote speaker. Senator-elect Hubert Humphrey also addressed this conference. This story and other early records of the United Nations movement were “rescued” from a storage locker on the West Coast.

Materials such as these “provide the color and emotion” of the early UN movement. The caption below the picture states “they are solid builders.” In addition to their professional jobs and family, they spoke often of the need for a strong United Nations. They built a large membership organization. They convinced the University of Minnesota and other colleges to offer programs on international studies and especially conflict resolution. They worked closely with Senator Hubert Humphrey and Congressmen Donald Fraser on disarmament and strengthening the United Nations.

The document collection and annotated bibliography also include some writings of Harlan Cleveland, a renowned diplomat, an honored scholar, and founding dean of the Humphrey Institute of Public Affairs. He was a very long-time member of the United Nations Association, served on the boards of directors of local groups and authored a world affairs column in the Minneapolis paper for seven years. His forte was to explain complex world affairs issues in a highly understandable manner.

Cleveland's 1993 book, Birth of a New World: An Open Moment for International Leadership, was the published outcome of a three-year study by a Blue Ribbon panel on "global governance." One chapter in that insightful book is especially useful: "The International System: What Works and Why."

On October 11, 1980, Cleveland gave an address to the Minnesota Historical Society entitled The Future of the Past. In this address, he carefully avoided detailed predictions of the future but made a persuasive case that the challenge to bring people together to solve problems is not an entirely new challenge. It can be productive to study how people faced immense and complicated global scale challenges in the past. Cleveland wryly observed "no one seems to be in charge of the whole world." In this address he quoted Walter Ong who observed "A lively curiosity of the past is a primary qualification for leaders who would mold our future destiny." It is very useful to review this short thought-provoking essay.

Goals of the Project and Its Challenges

Our stated purpose or mission was to gather materials from individuals and organizations that have contributed to the fulfillment of the goals of the United Nations. We have used the UN Charter and the UN Sustainable Development Goals as examples of these goals. Historically, only a small number of organizations have had a primary goal of promoting or supporting the United Nations. Other organizations have worked directly, indirectly, or at least used global standard setting with the United Nations on specific issues such as Human Rights, Refugees, or Economic Development.

There was interest, or perhaps curiosity, in our project mission, but only a few people seemed genuinely enthusiastic and therefore supportive of our data collection work. While we believe this project was moderately successful, it may be useful to examine some of the obstacles:

- 2020 is a distant timeframe for many people that are focused on near-term urgent issues such as violence, hunger, and the environment.
- The United Nations is not currently a central focus of US Administration international policies.
- Maintaining historical archives has been a low priority for individuals or small organizations with limited budgets or no permanent staff or offices.

- Many early United Nations enthusiasts have passed away, moved, or become inactive. Records have been discarded or were in danger of becoming permanently lost.
- The task of learning about the “global world” has passed in many cases to educational institutions that have specialized teachers, curriculum, or dedicated faculty or specialized resources.
- There was a plethora of other issues. For example, some individuals wanted to equate war resisting to building new institutions. Some people were interested in United States international policies, but felt the work of the United Nations was not closely aligned with the interests of the United States.

Among those people who are serious about contemporary global-scale issues, many believe that the need for the United Nations or “global structures” for peaceful decision-making will grow over time. They believe that we should critically examine past efforts of people working together and nations working together to build support for global structures to meet the needs of the future.

Project Outcomes

The accomplishments of this project are modest, but materials gathered can enhance an understanding of the role of global citizenship in today’s dynamic world. We located, catalogued, and annotated more than 460 items considered relevant to the project goals. These items will be placed in a central repository at the Minnesota History Center. The Excel spreadsheet is currently ordered by chronological time frame (year and month), with a brief description that indicates topical relevance. Unlike other collections these are not the papers of single individuals or a single organization, but an attempt to relate past actions to efforts by many Minnesotans to build institutions for a more free and healthy world.

One of the most important outcomes of the project was that many documents that were widely scattered were found and assembled in a coherent collection, with the intention of building a solid foundation of historical materials. This effort could be the starting point for further research, or used immediately in learning activities.

In the project proposal, we estimated that such a collection would be 150-250 items. As items were identified they were catalogued and shared online (Google sheets) so that the Project Manager and President of CGS-Minnesota and other interested Board members could review items being added to the indexed file. At the end of each month, the researcher wrote a brief report and billing invoice to document activities. A summary of the grant expenditures will be submitted to MNHS as a separate attachment.

During the grant period, the principal researcher made four different public presentations to talk about the history of the UN Movement in Minnesota: Citizens for Global Solutions Annual Meeting (June 2018), Saint John’s University student group (March 2019), World

Law Day in Minneapolis (May 2019), and the Festival of Nations in Saint Paul (May 2019). The time spent on preparing and delivering presentations was not included when charging hours to the grant funding.

Additional relevant items could be collected and added to this resource file. It is a question of time required and timing. Once the existence of this history project is better known, more materials will be “discovered” and could be added. In the next 6-9 months, possibly another 100 -200 items could be added.

Time and resources should now be focused on “interpreting” some of the most impactful items collected. Material could be used for educational purposes, such as newsletter articles, public presentations, and world affairs youth projects. Once longer term public education goals can be articulated, further efforts could be made to locate relevant historical resources. Another fruitful initiative would be to map relevant items in this collection to other items in the Minnesota History Center collections. For example, early leaders such as Fanny Brin, Adelaide Enright, Arvonne Fraser, York Langton, Harlan Smith, Harold Stassen, Marguerite Wells, and others already have materials housed in MNHS collections. In addition, organizations such as the Minnesota Peace and Justice Coalition and others have also archived their papers with MNHS.

Historical Items Often Contain Stories

When approaching people to solicit help in locating “old records,” often some degree of disinterest or reluctance to provide help existed. As time went by it became clearer that in general people were interested in stories rather than simply document gathering. After some less successful efforts, we adopted a general approach to show “some stories” or even pictures to accompany items collected. Below are some examples of stories we used that seemed to have resonance:

- Raising the UN Flag in Minneapolis on “Law Day” 1968
- MN engineers design harvesting tools to enhance food security in Africa
- Governor and business leaders decide to abide by the Paris Climate Accord
- Minnesota Governor signs proclamation for World Citizenship
- Premiere of Minnesota produced film on “world citizenship”

In most cases, the personal sincerity attached to the project and the emphasis on the fact that the United Nations movement was a classic “grass roots movement” enhanced curiosity and interest in a deeper understanding. Our Minnesota United Nations movement was primarily a vital “citizen movement” to address global issues.

Going forward the ability to narrate a compelling story with Minnesota citizens at the center will be the key to creating interest in this collection of historical items. The story, to be impactful, will likely be value laden with illustrations of working together for the common good, valuing other cultures and beliefs, recognizing basic human rights and needs, and sharing the earth with all living beings with appropriate concern for future generations.

Essential Facts, Historical Narrative, Compelling Stories

There seems to be only modest interest in "raw historical facts". Most people interviewed appreciated efforts to relate specific facts to a "historical narrative." A narrative provides important context, suggests general themes or developments, and may provide less obvious connections to the historical periods of our state and its connection to world history.

An example is the case of an Ethiopian church leader, Tsehai Tolessa (pictured in center; on her right is Amnesty International adoption case leader Ardes Johnson and on left interpreter (name unknown). Amnesty International Group 37 continuously advocated her release from prison for nearly nine years. After securing her release, Tsehai came to Minneapolis and personally thanked those who worked on her behalf. She was treated at the Center for Victims of Torture and eventually returned to her church activities in Ethiopia. It was a wonderful victory of the human spirit of Tsehai to persevere so long in the wretched prison. It was a wonderful tribute to so many who diligently continued their letter-writing and advocacy in a seemingly hopeless endeavor.

Stories and storytelling are important components of the celebration of 75 years of the United Nations activities. People who are interested in the work of the UN are often “spiritual people” who want to combat discord and brokenness in the world. Reasoned essays and political speeches are important, but a compelling story moves people to action. Recently an Amnesty International chapter hosted an entertainment night to support an Afghan asylum family that is being settled in Minneapolis. They are support to the family throughout the year.

Supplementary Historical Materials (Bibliography)

A limited bibliography of selected references has been prepared that includes the writing of several Minnesotans and other authors who have visited Minnesota and are believed by the researcher to have impacted the thinking and activities of the many people who have come to Minnesota, formed friendships with Minnesotans, and actively nurtured interest in the building of a vital and effective United Nation movement (Attachment C).

At this point a few people have inquired about more detailed information about the United Nations or people who have worked to fulfill the goals of the United Nations. Rather than prepare a comprehensive bibliography, we documented a concise listing that includes authors with Minnesota connections (e.g., Minnesota authors Cleveland, Schwartzberg, Weissbrodt, Werle, etc.) Many impactful people who visited Minnesota have written books or other publications that more fully described their ideas. Other entries include people who visited Minnesota to speak or work closely with Minnesotans or may have influenced the development of this historical movement in Minnesota.

Enduring Value: Future Activities on this Historical Project

Potential Future Projects

After we had experienced working on this project for several months, we shared some of our gathered materials and sought feedback for the potential future use of these materials via a questionnaire (Attachment D). Below is a listing of ideas for future use of this now-completed data-gathering project:

- Already confirmed: Host an event with speaker or a panel discussion at the James J. Hill House on the evening of October 23, 2019, in conjunction with United Nations Day.
- Hold a series of seminars or events during 2020 discussing various issues facing the UN and the possibilities of reform to make it more democratic.
- Create a well-crafted display / exhibit with an equally well-crafted marketing and outreach campaign that could be shown at the Minnesota History Center, other MNHS facilities, and many other locations around the state of Minnesota. The display should highlight contributions of Minnesotans to UN goals. Accompanied by online resources.

(NOTE: the J.J. Hill House has offered to provide space for such a display during the month of October 2019, if something is ready by then).

- Create a social media campaign of historical materials related to the UN Movement in Minnesota and /or relevance of the United Nations and global issues. We could release “one story at a time” throughout 2020, to keep it alive.
- Prepare and distribute materials that middle and high school teachers could incorporate into their curricula.
- Create a brief 4-page booklet that summarizes very early plans for the observance of the 75th anniversary of the UN with compelling five or so personal stories of people or families that have worked to fulfill the goals of the UN. OR, create a longer (20-25 page) booklet that highlights UN-related activities of Minnesota individuals and organizations. Provide specific examples of diverse people. Highlight the impact that “common people’s involvement” can have.
- Find a newspaper reporter (Star Tribune, Pioneer Press, Duluth News Tribune, Rochester Post-Bulletin) who is willing to write an article about our project and its stories.
- Blog posts, podcasts, 10-30 minute videos, public TV, community cable services.
- Work with museums, libraries, and universities/colleges across the state to connect other Minnesota UN stories. Unearth diverse stories of UN engagements in collaboration with other partners, such as the American Indian Movement Interpretive Center and the African American Heritage Museum & Gallery.

Relate Inspirational Stories of Past to Contemporary Global Challenges

To engage our audience with this important Minnesota history, it would be important to relate the inspirational stories of the past to contemporary global challenges. A brief listing of possible topics and themes are:

- A possible working theme: “The UN System: People and Nations Working Together for a Peaceful and Sustainable World”
- The various aspects of sustainability, especially climate stability (youth are especially engaged in this global concern)
- The UN Sustainable Development Goals should be highlighted whenever possible.
- Nuclear disarmament
- Cybersecurity threats
- Human rights
- Global trade
- Peacemaking / peacekeeping
- Providing safety for war refugees
- Self-determination and sovereignty

Jim is a lifelong Minneapolis resident. He earned degrees in Economics from the University of Minnesota and a Certificate in International Management from Minnesota State University, Mankato. He worked in Project Management and Administration for over 40 years in three Twin Cities industrial aerospace companies: Sperry Univac, Control Data, and Honeywell.

In parallel to his corporate career, Jim enjoyed working in small scale farms and gardens. In this avocation, his interests focused on native plants and insect pollinators. Jim is proud of his community involvement, especially in environmental affairs. One website, <https://nelsonfamilyfarm.org/>, contains learning resources based upon Jim's passionate interest and commitment.

Jim joined the United Nations Association in the spring of 1966. He is the longest continuing serving member of this Association. Jim was a close personal friend of the founder, York Langton, as well as many of the early leaders in the UN movement. During the 1970s, he became a member of several related organizations such as Amnesty International, Citizens for Global Solutions, and cultural organizations such as the American Swedish Institute.

He attended the first United Nations conference on the Environment in 1972. Years later he was recognized with the Honeywell Corporate Community Service Award in 1996 for community education about the United Nations' work. The United Nations Association of Minnesota honored Jim with the Harold Stassen Award in 2016 for his 50 years of service.

Jim has always been proud of the fact that he has been a "volunteer," not a paid staff member, in a variety of civic organizations. Like many of his colleagues, he is a non-expert actively exercising the global dimension of citizenship.

Our Journey: Minnesota United Nations Movement

The sated day is never first.

The best day is a day of thirst.

*Yes, there is goal and meaning in our path
but it's the way that is the labor's worth.*

Karin Boye, "In Movement"

Bold Beginnings: Years 1945-1972

From the drafting of the UN charter through the first UN Conference on Environment

"When the people lead, leaders will follow" is a quotation attributed to M. Gandhi. Many great social changes -- for example, national independence, the fall of the Soviet Union, eliminating apartheid in South Africa etc. -- are due in part to strong popular social movements. The quotation is a short hand description of the guiding principle of many members of the Minnesota United Nations movement. Global problems (nuclear war, refugees from conflict, terrorism, environmental degradation, disease) are often described in terms of being faraway, very complex, and distant from the daily lives of Minnesotans. Yet many have found inspiration in the words of the United Nations charter to take concrete actions to address needs as "world citizens" to make the world a more just and healthy place.

Our citizens' movement has been very diverse. It contains people who have professional credentials in global affairs, such as diplomats or educators, but is also comprised of people from all walks of life (i.e., nurses, airline pilots, chaplains, high school teachers, engineers, carpenters, homemakers) who have contributed to the solution of global problems in addition to their vocational and family roles. "Well done is better than well said" is a familiar Ben Franklin quote. United Nations citizens are not content with platitudes and slogans. They will work and often make sacrifices to perform modest but meaningful actions in pursuit of lofty global goals of the UN.

Examples of thoughtful action are individuals working to settle a refugee family displaced by a foreign war, and an engineer who volunteers to design a machine that could improve harvesting and reduce hunger in a faraway country. Other examples may include volunteers who sponsor an adult community discussion on a pressing international problem (e.g., human trafficking, climate change) or mentor children in a world affairs classroom discussion or a Model United Nations simulation.

Common Attributes of members of the United Nations Citizens Movement:

- Preferring to attempt to deal with the root cause of problems
- Publicly affirming important values
- Vigilant for opportunities to advance a more fair and sustainable world
- Prudent risk-takers with resilience to absorb periodic setbacks
- Acting on our values in meaningful ways, not merely observing the world
- Maintaining a long-term commitment to ensure a just world for succeeding generations

One could observe that in the aftermath of World War II these people decided that fixing the system of decision-making and working together was the highest priority and their personal mission. To use a Thoreau observation, “There are thousands hacking at the branches of evil to one striking at the roots.”

Eleanor Roosevelt was a national leader of the citizens’ movement to establish, nurture, and improve the United Nations. She was a good friend of Minnesotans Fanny Brin, York Langton, and Adelaide Enright. All of these people had experienced the Great Depression and had the calamity of World War II fresh in their consciousness. Adelaide was a prominent business woman and civic leader and was a leader in the world federalist movement and on many progressive issues. York was a beloved figure within all groups who worked for a strong United Nations. Claire and veteran Ron McLaughlin were among the earliest founders. All of these people drew inspiration from the work of Eleanor Roosevelt.

Lifelong learning and careful discernment are key features of members of the Minnesota United Nations movement. Rapid technology changes, social trends, and cultural differences added to global challenges and the complexity of finding solutions. To add confusion, many issues are colored by political bias, or questions of economics. Through the many years and issues, Minnesotans have sought to frame problems in terms of fundamental justice and our preference for a world based on the “force of law rather than the law of force.” The Annual UN week observance, Human Rights Day, Law Day, and Earth Day have all been opportunities to foster insightful balanced discussions of complex issues we all face as Minnesotans.

Evolving from the chaos of the Second World War were many thoughtful people determined to prevent a repeat of this calamity. There were two major membership organizations and a third group that was a network of many community organizations that were focused on global issues in general and more specifically promoting the goals of the United Nations. These community groups evolved over time, with some members belonging to two or even all three groups.

- 1. The federalist group had the most focused agenda. The federalist's viewpoint suggested that a strong supranational organization was required to mediate disputes between countries and groups through rigorous application of laws. A legal framework was most useful to resolve issues among competing parties. Their slogan was "World Peace through World Law." This group has a strong interest in the World Court, Law Day Observance, the International Criminal Court, and many changes that would make the UN stronger and more effective. UN Reform and Political Advocacy were dominant features.

The first group was founded by veteran pilot Ron and Clare McLaughlin in 1946 as the Americans United for World Government. They promptly united with other very similar groups as the United World Federalists with a national office in Washington, DC. Over time this title was changed to the World Federalist Association. Since many people felt that "world government" was a threat to national sovereignty, the more neutral term of Citizens for Global Solutions was adopted in 2004. Although membership has dwindled in recent years, members strongly believe that a significantly strengthened UN is needed to address contemporary global issues.

May 1 Law Day was first proclaimed by President Eisenhower in 1958. Many believe that part of the motivation of the observance was to overshadow Worker's Day military parades held in Russian and many socialist countries. The language of the statute calls it "a special day of celebration by the American people in appreciation of their liberties and rededication to the ideals of equality and justice under law."

Making the connection between Law Day and "world citizenship" was the result of creativity and persistent efforts of Minnesota federalists. The first world law day dinner was organized in 1964 by Martha Platt, Lynn Elling and Dr. Asher White. Almost from the beginning the concept of "mundialization" was discussed (i.e., declaring world citizenship for your town or city). This concept had proven to be very successful in several cities in Japan, Canada, and Scandinavia.

Resolutions were drafted and adopted by the Minneapolis City Council and later by the Hennepin County Board. The inaugural flag raising along with the US flag was held on May 1, 1968. Former Governor Elmer L. Andersen, surrounded by 28 mayors from surrounding cities, addressed the crowd with very memorable words: "I am proud to live where public authorities are courageously speaking out on behalf of an equal concern for all men everywhere and in the concept of world citizenship in a world community of nations living in peace under law."

2. A second UN-focused educational group emphasized goodwill and cooperation among people and between nations without overarching political authority. Often these people were focusing less on the dramatic question of war and peace and more on many functional issues, such as health, education, trade, development, refugees, and over time the environment. October UN day (October 24th) and other holidays were opportunities for learning. They devoted many resources to youth education about world affairs through programs like Model UN, where students debated contemporary issues playing the role of country diplomats. Education continues to be the dominant feature of this group.

This group began as the American Committee for the United Nations in 1946. York Langton, an executive with a wholesale hardware company, was the president for the first eight years and nurtured its growth over several decades. In addition, he was a member of both UN-themed groups. He was a personal friend of many UN personalities, including Eleanor Roosevelt and Ralph Bunche. In the spring of 1964, Mrs. Roosevelt came to Minnesota to re-charter and rename this local group as the division of United Nations Association of MN, a part of the United Nations Association of the United States which was headquartered in New York. There were two chapters, one in Minneapolis and another chapter called Head of the Lake Chapter in Duluth.

3. A third dynamic group was a network of primarily women's group. This network of women leaders was called the Women's United Nations Rally. The sole focus of these rally events was to present an annual energetic UN Day program in October. They drew participants from community groups, like the League of Women Voters, religious groups like Catholic or Jewish Women's clubs, and traditional peace groups like the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom. Although they had a governing board and a number of committees, they were not a membership group and worked only to complement other group's educational activities.

Mrs. Fanny Brin was the first head of this women's network. She was born in Romania and emigrated with her mother. She attended Minneapolis schools and the University of Minnesota, where she was an award winning debater. She taught school part time in Minnesota but spent most of her time on a career of unpaid public service. One of her causes was the National Committee on the Cause and Cure of War. Mrs. Brin effectively marshalled public opinion leading up to Kellogg Briand Pact in 1928. She made speeches to community groups during the 1940s to encourage public support to ratify the US entry into the United Nations. She was an alternate delegate to the San Francisco conference where the UN charter was drafted during 1945.

The Women's UN Rally was both strong and highly effective. Women seem to be naturally more relational and created social connections and networks. Once organized, they seemed adept at supporting one another and providing paths to leadership at a time when many business, political, and educational organizations were very male dominated. While the Annual UN Rally focused on the keynote speaker and educational seminars, the supporting background included decorations, spiritual invocations, and cultural complements, such as music and dance. Some of the most impactful speakers were women such as Eleanor Roosevelt, Madame Nehru, Ralph Bunche and Barbara Ward. It was very common for women to be very active one year in the Rally and rotate their attention and leadership to one of the other groups in other years.

These three groups of activists and community leaders dominated the conversation in the first 25 years of the Minnesota United Nations movement. They sponsored programs, wrote letters to the editor in local papers, and spoke at meetings large and small. The Federalists cultivated political leaders of both parties and frequently contacted them on specific issues such as disarmament and UN funding.

These groups still play an important role is the community. While some members belong to a single group, others are active in all groups. The major event and educational opportunity for the World Federalists was the Law Day programs on or near May 1 each year, while the UN Association members and UN Rally organizers focused on UN Week in October each year.

During this early period of United Nations advocacy, these groups stood out in the community. There were other complementary groups that were very supportive and still play an active role today. Thanks to the leadership and advocacy, the University of Minnesota established a very active World Affairs Center among others. Closely coordinated with the University activities was the Minnesota International Center recently renamed as Global Minnesota. Located near the University of Minnesota, they are well-known for at least three activities. The first activity is to arrange programs for international visitors and the second is to host speakers on contemporary global issues. A third program entitled “Great Decisions” organizes study groups on contemporary global issues, and after several study/discussion sessions invites citizens to offer recommendations.

The Foreign Policy Association was a gathering place for people interested in promoting a strong and effective national foreign policy. Although primarily an adult forum, they provided world affairs resource information to schools. The International Institute of Minnesota was primarily a cultural organization well-known for the Festival of Nations, held each year in May. However, they operate year round from an attractive Center near the Minnesota State Fair grounds. They provide direct services to immigrant and refugees including housing, vocational preparation, guidance on immigration practices and preparation for citizenship.

75 YEARS OF THE MINNESOTA UN MOVEMENT

Describing the evolution of the UN movement in terms of historical periods is a daunting challenge. Nevertheless, it is useful to describe these local UN activities in reference to the period in which they occurred. My choice is simply to describe this evolution in three 25 year blocks with labels: (1) 1945-1970: Early Enthusiasm; (2) 1970-1995: Middle Age Years; and (3) 1995-2020: Mature Period. Charles Dickens famous rhetorical quote, “the best of times and the worst of times” could be applied to any of these periods.

1945-1970: The First 25 Years, Early Enthusiasm

During the first 25 years of the UN establishment, all groups seemed successful by focusing on their strengths:

World Federalists were very focused on studying the UN structure and making reform recommendations. They believed in strong advocacy, frequently spoke publicly, and wrote editorial pieces. Training was often done in “home meetings” and periodic lecture series. They worked closely with government officials of both parties always emphasizing the power of “world law” and holding up the US federalist model of delegated and retained authority as a preferred model for governance of the whole world. The McLaughlin’s, the Platt family, and the Ellings were very visible leaders. The United World Federalists had a national office in Washington, D.C. to promote direct communication with elected officials.

The United Nations Association focused on education about global issues. They developed or promoted curriculum materials for youth and fact sheets for adults. They supported the UN Rally and the World Federalist law day programs, and organized events at other times of the year. In much of this early period they had a retail store that gave the group greater visibility. The retail shop was only marginally profitable, but many volunteers enjoyed the personal contact and the opportunity to show their support for the United Nations.

The early activities of these organizations were overshadowed by the “Cold War” and suspicion of the Soviet Union. The engagement in the Korean conflict was a qualified success. There were many intractable conflicts around the world arising from decolonization. Some of the more promising highlights:

- Engagement with the Political leaders like Senator Hubert Humphrey and community leader’s former Governor Elmer L Andersen.
- Establishment of the World Affairs Center at the University of Minnesota in 1950. A major United Nations conference was sponsored by the University in 1954.
- A Senate hearing on disarmament with opportunities to testify took place in Minneapolis in 1954 and 1956 thanks to the efforts of Senator Humphrey

- A very successful program with leaders (Senator Hubert Humphrey, Representative Walter Judd) including UN Charter signatory Harold Stassen was held on the 15th Anniversary of the UN Charter in 1960.
- In response to President Kennedy's call for a "peace race", thousands of signatures on a petition were collected by (members of the United World Federalists) and presented in a ceremony at the White House.
- Ralph Bunche, a Nobel Prize (and Medal of Freedom) winner, spoke at the UN rally in Minneapolis in 1963 on the successful use of mediation and peacekeeping especially in Africa and the Middle East.
- The first Law Day dinner, organized by the Federalists and warmly endorsed by UN Association, took place in April 1964. The tradition of a national speaker and the "enforceable world law" theme would continue for several decades.
- A bold and thoughtful action occurred in Minneapolis on May 1, 1968. The United Nations banner joined the American flag in front of the Minneapolis courthouse. Businessman Lynn Elling and civic leader Martha Platt organized this inaugural event. Elmer Andersen gave the keynote address.
- Using the 1968 declaration as a model, a statewide declaration of world citizenship was signed by Governor Wendell Anderson at the Minnesota State Capitol on March 26, 1971. The governor had these words. "I am very proud that Minnesota is the first to have such a declaration of 'world citizenship.' I hope that it proves to be a catalyst, a vehicle to be used throughout the country to better promote world peace."

A few days later, on March 30, 1971, the Minneapolis Tribune warmly endorsed these actions with the words "The declaration merely expresses the significance for individual Americans of their country's commitment to a strong United Nations. They share in the world responsibility we are in this sense citizens of the world"

The UN Rally in 1972 had a large and successful program featuring Barbara Ward Jackson. It signaled that the agenda of the United Nations would be broadened to include crucial agendas of environment, livelihood and economic development rather than the earlier more limited focus of preventing military wars between nation states.

The author of this interpretive guide divided the development of the United Nations into three periods of 25 years. In future months more details will be provided about how Minnesotans responded to the evolving role of the United Nations in addressing global problems.

Attachment C: Annotated Bibliography

Books were chosen because they were popular among Minnesota United Nations scholars, supporters and advocates. Many ideas presented in these volumes influenced the development of the United Nations movement in our state.

Barnett, Michael N., and Martha Fennimore. Rules for the World: International Organization in Global Politics. Cornell University, 2004.

A penetrating study of international organizations and the extent of their authority especially how rules are made or norms established. Special attention is paid to how rules impact people around the world. The authors outline how bodies become bureaucracies and how to make such bodies more responsive to the needs of the people. Most local readers seemed to prefer a limited central authority with strong local autonomy. This book was widely discussed by Minnesota audiences, especially among reform-minded UN supporters in Minnesota.

Bernstein, Edward M, et al. The Bretton Woods-GATT System: Retrospect and Prospect after Fifty Years. M.E. Sharpe, 1996.

This book is the published results of a series of seminars organized by the Minneapolis based Institute for Agriculture and Trade Policy. It deeply researches the origins of many international organizations founded in conjunction with the United Nations. The special focus is on trade, financial structures and development. Most authors try to capture the vitality of the founding generation, with refinements to meet the changing highly interdependent contemporary world.

Bloomfield, Lincoln. P. The Foreign Policy Process: A Modern Primer. Prentice-Hall, 1982.

The author spoke several times in Minnesota and collaborated with the Humphrey Institute on global governance studies. His writing and speaking were very intelligible to the lay person. This book clearly describes international policy processes in terms a lay person can understand and respond. The volume is a good preliminary background text for those who want to change the complex world we all share. Bloomfield collaborated with Harlan Cleveland on the Humphrey Institute study of global institutions.

Clark, Grenville, and Louis B. Sohn. Introduction to World Peace through World Law. World without War Publ., 1984.

This book, especially the earlier editions, was the inspiration and common guidebook for many early UN supporters who viewed the United Nations as a stepping stone to “world government”. The emphasis on enforceable world law made the United Nations more attractive to the American audience. Even people who favored a more limited government role found many suggestions for making the United Nations more effective. This book was a favorite among Minnesota “world federalists.”

Cleveland, Harlan, Birth of a New World: An Open Moment for International Leadership. Jossey-Bass, 1993.

Between 1986 and 1989, 31 scholars and administrators from 24 countries accepted the author's challenge to "rethink international governance." The Group, as Cleveland calls them, saw an unstable political world confronting ecological disaster, ethnic strife, and growing divisions between rich and poor--all accompanied by the apparent failure of the traditional nation-state. At the same time, it noted the end of the Cold War, a burgeoning demand for freedom among most peoples, and an increase in global knowledge fueled by computers and vastly improved telecommunications. Thus, we now have a rare chance to recast international leadership.

Daley, Tad. Apocalypse Never: Forging the Path to a Nuclear Weapon-Free World. Rutgers Univ. Press, 2012.

The author was on the national board of Citizens for Global Solutions, and spoke in Minnesota several times. Apocalypse Never maintains that the abolition of nuclear weapons is both essential and achievable, and reveals in fine detail what we need to do – both governments and movements – to make it a reality. Daley insists that while global climate change poses the single greatest long-term peril to the human race, the nuclear challenge in its many incarnations – nuclear terror, nuclear accident, a nuclear crisis spinning out of control – poses the single most immediate peril.

Ferencz, Benjamin B., and Ken Keyes. Planet Hood: the Key to Your Future. Love Line Books, 1991.

Ferencz was one of the prosecutors at the World War II Nuremberg tribunals. This experience taught us that creating a world of tolerance and compassion would be a long and arduous task. We also learn in this book if we do not devote ourselves to developing effective world law, the same cruel mentality that made the Holocaust possible might one day destroy the entire human race. The book was published in an inexpensive format to make it widely accessible. Ferencz was on the National Board of the World Federalist Association and a “thought leader” on global institutions.

Hartsough, David. Waging Peace: Global Adventures of a Lifelong Activist. PM Press 2014.

Hartsough along with Mel Duncan is the founder of Minnesota based Nonviolent Peaceforce that sends trained mediators in global conflict zones to resolve deeply contentious issues without the resort to force. Peace will only come when all of us become the change we wish to see in this world. The author became that change and has spent the best part of 60 years working to bring peace to our troubled world. The premise of the book is to seek fairness and thus preclude violence.

Macqueen Norrie, The United Nations: A Beginners Guide. One World Publications, 2010.

Since its inception in 1945, the United Nations has had a powerful but controversial influence on global politics. In this informative guide, Norrie Macqueen provides a clear and comprehensive introduction to its institutions, funding, personalities, and role in the modern world. Defending it from common criticisms of bureaucratic paralysis and bias towards the developed world, MacQueen argues that its limitations are due to the complex web of national interests that it seeks to reconcile. This was a standard text for high school teachers preparing students for "Model UN."

Mendis, Patrick. Trade for Peace: How the DNA of America, Freemasonry, and Providence Created a New World Order with Nobody in Charge. iUniverse, Incorporated 2009.

Mendis, a native of Sri Lanka, was educated at the University of Minnesota and especially at the Humphrey Institute of Public Policy. He was active in civic organizations that studied world affairs and especially the role of the United Nations, including the United Nations Association. For those who are interested in American foreign and trade policies, this work connects the dots from the Founding Fathers' global vision to the global marketplace within which America competes today.

Schwartzberg, Joseph E. Transforming the United Nations System: Designs for a Workable World. United Nations University Press, 2013.

How can the United Nations become a more effective force for good in the world today? Dr. Joseph Schwartzberg sets out to answer that question with detailed proposals for reforming the key institutions and functions of the UN system. Professor of geography at the University of Minnesota from 1964-2000, Schwartzberg led the Minnesota chapter of the World Federalists for three decades and founded the Workable World Trust in 2014. The book is not so much a classic piece of scholarship as it is an extended set of detailed policy prescriptions. Many of the problems we face as a society are truly global in scale and require effective global scale institutions.

Stuhler, Barbara, and Gretchen Kreuter, eds. Women of Minnesota: Selected Biographical Essays. St. Paul : Minnesota Historical Press, 1977.

This rich collection of essays of Minnesota women highlights less known contributions of women in the political and cultural life in our state. One singularly important person is Fanny Brin who worked throughout the 1930's and 40's to ease the economic hardship that so many faced, especially immigrants. She was a behind the scenes influence at the drafting of the United Nations Charter and a tremendous force for rallying public support for its adoption. Another very notable person was Ambassador Eugenie Anderson.

United Nations. Our Common Future: The World Commission on Environment and Development. Oxford University Press, 1987.

Currently some of the best known work of the United Nations involves the UN's Sustainable Development Goals. The UN's World Commission for Environment and Development, chaired by former Norwegian Prime Minister Gro Harlem Brundtland, began this era in United Nations development with the publication of this study. From this seminal study many countries and organizations began to tie some of their goals to the UN goals, inspired to conform to the needs of the world.

Many of the SDG efforts taking place in Minnesota are coordinated under the umbrella of the "Minnesota SDG Roundtable," chaired by Mark Ritchie. The mission of the Roundtable is "to advance the UN's Sustainable Development Goals by serving as a forum for education, coordination, and discussion." It is valuable to also note that Minnesotans were also heavily engaged in education and actions in support of the Millennium Development Goals (2000 – 2015), the precursor to the SDGs.

Urquhart, Brian. Ralph Bunche: an American Odyssey. W.W. Norton, 1993.

Both the author and subject were honored United Nations civil servants who made several trips to Minnesota and had strong friendships with many Minnesotans. Ralph Bunche was instrumental — sometimes at great personal risk — in finding peaceful solutions to incendiary conflicts around the world, while at the same time he was never far from the realities of racial prejudice. He is considered by many to be a mentor to Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. Bunche rose from modest circumstances to become the foremost international mediator and peacekeeper of his time, winner of the 1950 Nobel Peace Prize and key drafter of the United Nations charter.

Wallenstein, Peter. Understanding Conflict Resolution: War, Peace and the Global System. London: SAGE Publications, 2007.

This book provides a comprehensive guide to understanding conflict resolution in today's global world. The author introduces the fields of conflict resolution as they have developed since the end of the Cold War and demonstrates various approaches to conflict analysis and conflict resolution. The core of the book explores three major types of international conflict: inter-state; internal; and state formation conflicts. The final part reviews regional and international approaches to peaceful conflict resolution, notably the UN, discusses the concerns of the major powers in conflict, and outlines pertinent questions for the future.

Weiss, Thomas G. Would the World Be Better without the UN? Polity Press, 2018.

This book with a provocative title helps focus the mind. The author demonstrates the pluses and minuses of multilateral cooperation. He is not shy about UN achievements and failures drawn from its ideas and operations in its three substantive pillars of activities: international peace and security; human rights and humanitarian action; and sustainable development. He argues, the populist movements in electoral politics worldwide make robust multilateralism more not less compelling. There is a desperate need to reinvigorate and update rather than jettison the United Nations in responding to threats from climate change to pandemics, from proliferation to terrorism. Weiss tells you why and how. Professor Weiss presented a talk on key themes of this book at the March 2018 dinner event hosted by Minnesota's Council on Foreign Relations.

Werle, Steven. Stassen Again. Minnesota Historical Society Press, 2015.

In 1938 Harold E. Stassen was elected governor of Minnesota at age 31, an office he resigned in 1943 to enter the United States Navy at the height of World War II. In the postwar years he helped write the charter of the United Nations and, serving in the Eisenhower administration, very nearly achieved a nuclear test ban treaty with the Soviet Union. The author is a Minnesota high school teacher, a Model United Nations trainer and an active member of the Minnesota chapter of UN Association. He provides fresh insights into the formation of the United Nations and the challenges of reconciling competing national interests.

Ward, Barbara. The Rich Nations and the Poor Nations. WW Norton, 1962.

Barbara Ward had become Lady Jackson by the time she was keynote speaker at the 1963 Minnesota Women's United Nations Rally.

World Federalist Association, 1947 – 1997: Fiftieth Anniversary Historical Survey*. World Federalist Association, 1997.

History of the organization and its advocacy of a one-world federated government. The 46-page paperback was written "In Memory of Stanley K. Platt." Other Minnesotans mentioned include Hubert H. Humphrey, Martha Platt and Arvonne Fraser. The book's primary value to this project is to give context to the Minnesota UN activities.

Wurst, James. The UN Association-USA: a Little Known History of Advocacy and Action. Lynne Rienner Publishers, 2016.

The United Nations Association–USA has had an impact on both the UN and the US–UN relationship far greater than its size would suggest. The author explores that impact as he traces the sometimes challenging history of the UNA-USA from its earliest days to the present. Beginning with efforts in support of the creation of the United Nations—and covering the decades-long campaign to promote the UN to the US public the author explains the role of Eleanor Roosevelt and many early leaders. There is a wealth of archival material and personal interviews to tell a story of the UNA-USA's persistence, problems, and achievements. The book's primary value is to give context to the Minnesota UN activities.
